DISCIPLINE, LAW, AND ORDER

The ad hoc committee of General Faculties Council on Discipline, Law, and Order has received briefs from the University community and has reviewed documents from other universities. The committee particularly wishes to acknowledge the contributions of the York and Queen's Universities. A report setting forth tentative conclusions on philosophy and responsibility is printed here. The comments and further suggestions of interested members of the University community are sought before the final submission to General Faculties Council is made. Comments should be addressed to F. WEICHMAN, Department of Physics, to arrive by April 9, 1971.

PHILOSOPHY AND RESPONSIBILITIES

Introduction

The University of Alberta is an institution created by the Legislature of the Province of Alberta through the Universities Act of 1966 with subsequent amendments. By design, its purposes are not specified but are implied by the Act.

The university is defined by tradition as a community of people dedicated to the pursuit of truth and advancement of knowledge, and as a place where there is freedom to teach, freedom to engage in research, freedom to create, freedom to learn, freedom to study, freedom to speak, freedom to associate, freedom to write and to publish, and a concomitant obligation to respect these freedoms when they are exercised by others.

It is difficult to remove considerations of university functioning from its larger social context. The university community has traditionally involved itself in criticism of societal institutions. Recently it has tended to become an instrument of social and political reform (and sometimes even of revolution). The position of social critic carries with it the burden of social responsibility, both in the university's relation to the surrounding community and in its internal functioning. Given its unique position at the forefront of material and behavioral technology, the university has the additional responsibility of making new knowledge constantly available for the betterment of society.

The university consists of (a) teaching staff, selected on the basis of expertise in their chosen discipline, willing to communicate and able to keep themselves up to date in their discipline; (b) a student body whose primary reason for coming to the university is to obtain knowledge in one or more fields; and (c) supporting staff of various types who facilitate the student-faculty interaction. Each of these constituent groups has responsibilities. These are made explicit in the following assumptions.

Assumptions

1. It is assumed that the teaching staff
 - (a) will be experts in their chosen field,
 - (b) will, by continuing study and research, remain experts in their field,
 - (c) will consider it their duty to pass on their knowledge by teaching, publication, and discussion,
 - (d) will pass scrupulous judgment on knowledge attained, where this may be required,
 - (e) will respect the ethics of professional life and university living.
2. It is assumed
 - (a) that students come to the university with a desire to learn,
 - (b) that learning consists in part of listening to lectures, participating in discussions, attending laboratories, doing assignments, and engaging in other educational activities.
3. It is assumed that a university, once it reaches an appreciable size, cannot function without supporting staff—staff whose purpose is to aid student-faculty interaction. In view of legal differences in terms of employment at the university and in terms of responsibility to the university we recognize three categories of supporting staff:
 - (a) University administrators,
 - (b) Non-academic staff,
 - (c) Non-teaching academic staff such as administrative assistants and librarians.
4. It is assumed that students, staff, and visitors will be held liable to the courts as ordinary citizens for violation of the law of the land, and/or to appropriate university "judicial" bodies for interference with the teaching and learning processes.

Role of laws and regulations

The major proportion of the conduct of all members of the university community comes under the jurisdiction of city ordinances and the federal Criminal Code. Thus when regulations exist through jurisdictions outside the university, those regulations shall be law on the university campus and shall be binding upon all members of the university community. Enforcement should lie with those agencies and agents who hold the authority to enforce. Since the university should be at the forefront of behavioral technology, if it has its own police force, this force should be of exemplary calibre.

The university also engages in activities which relate to its purpose and tradition; many such activities call for regulations not provided for through jurisdictions outside the university. Only in these circumstances can the university justifiably write its own regulations and see to their enforcement. Students, faculty, non-academic staff, and visitors to the campus all are subject to the regulations written, enforced, and adjudicated by the university. Regulations which are autonomous to the university shall only relate to the purpose and tradition of the university.

IRANIAN MUSICIAN TO PERFORM

MOZAFFAR SOUDI, a second year engineering student, surprised his friends several weeks ago with the announcement that he was playing a classical concert of Iranian music. They had not known he was a musician. Mozaffar is indeed a musician—since 1959 and 1960 when he won first prize in national violin contests in his native Iran, he has toured nine European countries, has performed in Washington, D.C., New York, and the western states, and has a recording contract. He plays the classical instruments of ancient Persia—the santour, like a dulcimer, the dombak, a goblet-shaped drum, the violin, and the tar, a six-stringed instrument. But he has never performed in Canada, in fact he has not performed anywhere for over two years.

"Last year I did not practise too much, but I became so lonely, this year I singing and his talents on the santour and the dombak."

The music he plays is in the Kurdish style of Persia, which, to occidental ears, sounds mournful and distant. He sings as he strikes the 88-stringed santour with small wooden mallets. The santour is a shallow trapezoidal box with metal strings, four to a course, each course having its individual bridge which is adjusted for microtonal intervals. The dombak, which is Mozaffar's specialty, he plays with all eight fingers, producing a range of tones from very deep at the centre to a tight, dry sound at the rim.

"Some pieces are written, but many are mainly improvised. This is why it is very important for me to have the feel of the hall, and to be comfortable with the audience," Mozaffar explains. As engrossed in music as he is, he wants this concert to be more than a display of his virtuosity. "My main objective is to show the culture of my country." A true classical purist, Mozaffar Soudi guards against western influences in his art, and plays the folk tunes which are part of Iran's history. Along with his music there will be a reading from the Rubaiyat of Omar Kayam, and a film of Persian classical dancing.

play a lot by myself. I would like to play for people." Mozaffar Soudi will perform in the Students' Union Theatre on Tuesday, March 30, at 8 p.m. The concert is free; in Iran a price is never placed on the classics because they belong to the people.

Known as an outstanding musician in his own country, Mozaffar Soudi has been enthusiastically received in America as well. He has performed in places as varied as the Freer Gallery in Washington, D.C., for Secretary of State Dean Rusk, the Hilton International in Seattle, and for 6,000 people at the International Festival at the University of Oregon. The newspaper account of his Oregon performance said, "Soudi topped the show with his soul-moving

COUNCIL ON STUDENT AFFAIRS

The proceedings of the meeting of the Council on Student Affairs are provided by DAVID GUE, Recording Secretary.

At its meeting on March 16, the Council on Student Affairs took the following decisions:

(a) An amendment to Article 11 of the Students' Union Constitution allowing members of the executive of the Union to register in only one course but still be considered full-time students was referred to General Faculties Council when the vote on a motion to reject the amendment was tied. COSA had previously asked that the proposal not be implemented until decisions were reached on student representation on General Faculties Council and on administrative reorganization of the Students' Union.

(b) A student activity zone will be established in the northeast corner of the main floor of the Central Academic Building. Organizations registered with the Students' Union will be permitted to use the area for activities approved by the Students' Union co-ordinator, under the same regulations which govern the use of the Students' Union Building and other activity zones.

(c) The recommendation of last year that the Student Handbook contain a section on University regulations and procedures was reaffirmed.

The Council also heard a report from outgoing President, TIM CHRISTIAN, on the highlights of Students' Union activities during the year.
